From the White House to migrant communities in Southern California, León Krauze has spent nearly three decades telling the stories that define our time. Today, he is an indispensable voice in coverage of politics, migration, and the future of democracy.

Krauze is one of the most respected and versatile journalists in the Spanish-speaking world. For eleven years, he anchored Univision 34's nightly newscast in Los Angeles, where he became a trusted voice in the immigrant community through his award-winning community journalism segment, La Mesa. He later led Univision's national evening news program, stepping down in 2023 on principle.

He is a columnist for the Global Opinions section of The Washington Post and for El Universal, and his work has appeared in outlets such as Slate, The New Yorker, The Atavist, The Daily Beast, and Letras Libres. His analysis blends intellectual depth with clarity and accessibility, particularly on topics related to U.S. politics, migration, and hemispheric relations.

Krauze has received numerous awards, including ten Emmy Awards, the Edward R. Murrow Award, the LA Press Club Award, and the Golden Mic. In 2024, he was named Journalist of the Year by the BRAVO! Awards.

He has published seven books, including La Mesa: Historias de nuestra gente, La Casa Dividida, and El Vuelo de Eluán. In 2024, he released his second novel, La Gran Desaparición.

As an academic, Krauze has taught in both Mexico and the United States. In 2016, he held the prestigious Wallis Annenberg Chair in Journalism at the University of Southern California (USC), where he remains an active member of the Annenberg Center for Communication Leadership & Policy.

He currently hosts En Boca de León, a national podcast produced in partnership with Revolver Media, the leading Spanish-language podcast distribution platform in the U.S., and Ciberdiálogos, the interview podcast from Letras Libres, one of the most acclaimed Spanish-language intellectual spaces.

Thanks to his experience, insight, and communication style, Krauze is an ideal voice to explain the major geopolitical trends of our time and the battle of ideas between democracy and authoritarianism. His consistent and respected presence in both the United States and Latin America makes him a unique bridge between regions and a vital guide for audiences seeking understanding, context, and clarity.

PROGRAMAS

Battle of Ideas

A sweeping look at the defining ideological conflict of our time: the tension between emerging authoritarianism and liberal democracy. Krauze unpacks the factors weakening modern democracies and explores how populist narratives, disinformation, and institutional fatigue are reshaping the global political map.

The U.S. at a Crossroads

What's at stake in American democracy? From the rise of authoritarian-leaning leaders to institutional fragility, Krauze examines whether the country's democratic traditions can withstand extreme polarization and distrust. A vital analysis of the world's leading power.

Migration, Borders, and the Future

Beyond the headlines, Krauze examines the root causes of regional migration: violence, climate change, inequality, and economic opportunity. A comprehensive perspective connecting geopolitics, human rights, and strategic outlooks for governments and businesses in the U.S.–Latin America relationship.

Media, Audiences, and Cultural Power

In a digital world dominated by noise, Krauze argues for the pivotal role of Hispanic media in rebuilding public trust. Through examples and strategies, he illustrates how journalism can counter disinformation, engage new generations, and serve democracy.

Hemispheric Geopolitics

China, the United States, and Latin America: how is power shifting in the 21st century? Krauze offers a clear, provocative reading of the new regional order—covering nearshoring, energy transitions, strategic alliances, and the challenges facing evolving democracies.
